

B2B Buyer Journey Content Analysis

What 30 enterprise software companies reveal about the gap between marketing confidence and buyer enablement

30

B2B tech companies

analyzed across 6 buyer journey stages

15

Buyer journey dimensions

scored 1-to-5 across 30 companies

2.13^{pt}

Largest gap: Confidence

vs. Competitive Comparison (1.80)

1.22^{pt}

Late-stage content drop

Awareness 3.35 avg → Decision 2.13

FULL SCORECARD — ALL 15 DIMENSIONS (AVG OUT OF 5.0)

STAGE-BY-STAGE AVERAGE

BIGGEST GAPS IN THE DATA

FIVE KEY INSIGHTS

INSIGHT 01

The Confidence Paradox

Vendor credibility (3.93 avg) is the top score in the study. Competitive comparison (1.80 avg) is the bottom. That 2.13-point gap is not an oversight. It means companies have opted out of the one conversation buyers need most before signing.

PMM Lever: Own the comparison. Build competitive guides and comparison pages before a third party

INSIGHT 02

The Late-Stage Cliff

Early-stage content averages 3.35. Decision-stage content averages 2.13. The 1.22-point drop reflects where content investment stops. B2B content is built for traffic and MQLs. Buyers who are ready to buy get handed off to sales with no self-serve support.

PMM Lever: Map content to the full journey. Late-stage assets (ROI calculators, business case

INSIGHT 03

Demo Access Is a Deliberate Gate

Technical validation scores 3.73. Demo access scores 2.00. The 1.73-point gap is a business model choice. The "talk to sales first" gate forces qualification. But buyers experience it as friction. Data from product-led companies shows faster growth where self-serve is available.

PMM Lever: Build ungated product walkthrough videos. Buyers who see the product before talking to

INSIGHT 04

Companies Explain. They Cannot Differentiate.

Solution explanation scores 3.87. Competitive differentiation scores 2.53. Most B2B sites describe what they do. Almost none explain why they win. Phrases like "purpose-built for enterprise" without side-by-side proof are noise. Positioning requires comparison.

PMM Lever: Differentiation is a PMM deliverable. Battle cards, competitive landing pages, and

INSIGHT 05

The Buying Committee Blindspot

Consensus and onboarding content both score 2.33. The average B2B purchase involves 6 to 10 stakeholders. Content is written for one reader. No CFO ROI summary. No IT security FAQ. No procurement guide. Sales fills this gap manually for every deal. That does not scale.

PMM Lever: Build a stakeholder content map. Role-specific assets for each buying participant reduce deal friction and message drift.